RUSSIANS MAKE A DESPERATE STAND BUT WARSAW FALLS

Bavarian Troops Finally Cut Way Into Polish Capital.

MANY RUSSIANS ARE TAKEN

German Official Announcement Comments on Bravery of Last Band of Russian Defenders. City's Fall Comes After a Long Campaign.

By Associated Press.

BERLIN, Aug. 5 (by wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—Warsaw was taken this morning by German troops, according to official announcement made at the German army headquarters.

Yesterday and last night Bavarian troops under Prince Leopold broke through the forts of the outer and inner line of the city's defences, where the rear guard of the Russian troops made a tenacious resistance.

Continuing the report from headquarters says:

"The German armies under General Von Scholz and General Von Gallwitz advanced in the direction of the road between Lomza, Ostrov and Vyszkov and fought several violent engagements. The brave and desperate resistance of the Russians on both sides of the road between Ostrov and Rozan was without success.

"Two hundred and twenty-two Russian officers and 1,910 soldiers were taken prisoners. The Germans also took 17 machine guns.

"German cavalry yesterday and the day before defeated in Courland detachments of Russian cavalry at points near Gensize, Virshi and Onikshty. A total of 2,225 Russians were taken.

"The situation near and north of Ivangorod remains unchanged.

"The campaign is being continued between the Upper Vistula and the River Bug. German cavalrymen have entered Wadimir-Volynsk on the Bug river.

"In Vosges there have been new engagements near the Lingekopf."

The fall of Warsaw marks the culmination of the greatest sustained offensive movement of the European war.

Thrice before Teutonic armies have knocked at its gates only to be denied by the strength of its defenses and the resistance of the forces holding it. Apparently impregnable in the face of the attack it was compelled to capitulate before the sweep of a vast movement which threatened to encircle the capital and with it the Russian armies engaged in the campaign of which it was the storm centre.

From the north, northwest, west, south and southeast the Austro-Germans had been pressing upon the capital in their combined drive to force the Russians out of Poland and if possible to break their offensive power for an indefinite period by administering a decisive defeat along the line. The movement may be said to have its inception in May when the great Teutonic march through Galicia began. To get at the Russians in Poland from the southeast it was first necessary to rid Galicia or the greater part of it of the troops of that nation.

How successfully this was accomplished is familiar history. Field Marshal Mackensen's campaign in its first important stage culminated when late in June Lemberg was taken and the Russians were driven over the border. Then early in July the Teutonic forces coming from the south halted while preparations were made for the next stage of the campaign.

Signs of the form this was to take were soon apparent. Great armies had been assembled to the north and they were early to be in pressing down upon the Russians from that direction. A vast offensive was opened in the Baltic provinces.

Simultaneously the Teutons in the south showed activity. Field Marshal Von Mackensen resumed his advance, his German forces working with the Austrians to inflict smashing blows on the Russians from this direction. Step by step the Austro-German host pounded their way toward the city from north and south while on the west activities on the line of entrenchment that had so long held off the Germans were resumed before the power of the Teutons ceased. In this encircling movement the armies of Grand Duke Nicholas were slowly pushed back.

Prasnysz to the north of Warsaw was occupied and the armies swept on. By July 13 they had forced the Russians back to the line of the Narew river and pushed their way to within 20 miles of their goal. The fortress of Ostrolenka was taken and the Novogeorgievsk fortifications the key to Warsaw on the north were approached. To the south Radom was occupied and the Russian line of communication in the Lublin region threatened.

Then began a tightening of the German line around the capital. The Teutons forced their way past Blonie line southwest of the city, pushed their way across the river Narew below Ostrolenka and the battering at the gates of the fortified city started in earnest on Tuesday of this week by Bavarian troops under the command of Prince Leopold of Bavaria.

ROSENBERG MUST GIVE HIS GOAT A WEEKLY BATH

Mayor Lays Down Rules, Which Include Inspection by the Health Officer.

Anybody who has the temerity to rear a goat within the classic confines of Connellsville must wash that selfsame goat at frequent intervals—thoroughly with soap, water and perhaps an antiseptic of some kind—scrub out the goat sty just as often and submit both goat and pen to the health officer for a weekly inspection. At least that's what the mayor told Jacob Rosenburg of Second street, West Side, this morning and what applies to one must apply to all. All goats look alike to the mayor.

Mr. Rosenburg was arraigned in police court on a charge of keeping an unsanitary goat-pen, the complainant being John Johnson, colored, a neighbor. Several witnesses testified that the Rosenburg premises are littered with barrels and boxes and in anything but a sanitary condition. The goat-pen was also declared to be offensive.

The mayor heard the testimony and then told the aged defendant that he could keep the goat if he felt that way about it but that he would have to see that it had its bath regularly and that its pen was kept immaculate. He said nothing about using any perfume on the animal but he was insistent about the baths. Mr. Rosenburg was fined $1.

THREE CHILDREN PERISH

Burn to Death When Fire Sweeps a Summer Resort.

By Associated Press.

DELAVAN, Wis., Aug. 5.—Three children were burned to death, eight cottages were destroyed and a ninth dynamited to save others in a fire at Lake Delavan, a resort near here early today. The fire was brought under control in time to save a number of summer hotels.

The dead are Helen, Lucy and Mary Bryant, children of George G. Bryant, president of the Racine Rubber Company, in whose cottage the fire is believed to have started from an overheated chimney. Because of the cold weather grate fires had been lighted in the cottages for several nights.

The Bryant children apparently were dazed and refused to jump from the windows when they were told to do so. While their parents watched helpless their clothing caught fire and they fell back into the burning room. A search for a ladder consumed some time and when it was procured the children were dead.

WANT RATES CUT

Coal Operators and Miners in Ohio Seek Tariff Adjustments.

By Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 5.—Hearing was begun today by the Utilities Commission of Ohio on the petition for a change of coal rates upon railroads within the state.

Thirty-nine railroads are affected while arrayed on the side that is asking the change of the rates are the coal operators of Ohio and the representatives of 40,000 miners who are idle as the result of the closing of the mines.

Both operators and miners allege that the suspension of the mines is due to the fact that the present freight rates are discriminatory to such an extent that the Ohio product cannot be marketed in competition with West marketed in competition with West Virginia coal.

Coroner Believes That Many Foreigners Were Caught in Debris.

FIFTEEN ARE REPORTED MISSING

Crews Work in Glaring Sun to Clear Away the Debris Which Covers the Devastated Section, Naval Militia Called Out to Aid National Guard.

By Associated Press.

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 5.—Twenty-four bodies have been recovered, 18 of which have been identified and a list of names of 15 known missing persons is the correct total this morning of victims of Tuesday night's flood. Coroner Hanley said this morning that he thought the death list would reach 75, being swelled by the probable loss of a number of foreigners whose homes were swept away on the banks of the creek at Ninth street.

Working in relays under a scorching sun police, firemen and volunteers today continued their search in the masses of wreckage piled along Mill creek by Tuesday night's freshet for the bodies still believed to be in the debris. Some headway was made during the night and anxious crowds moved from morgue to morgue every time the report was spread that another body had been recovered. There still remain great piles of ruins that have not been explored and friends of the many missing persons shudder when they think what these unsightly heaps may yield.

One body was recovered during the night, that of a foreigner, although there were reports of other finds to disappoint the watchers along the ravine. The body was taken to Coroner Hanley's morgue, to which place others had been removed.

Work of clearing up the city was commenced in earnest this morning. The naval militia was called out to reinforce the infantrymen of the National Guard on duty around the stricken section and sightseers were kept away from the working gangs. These latter were detailed by parties under competent foremen so the best possible result could be obtained.

"There are no more than 500 persons made homeless and destitute," today declared Mayor Stern, who has taken active charge of all relief work. "We have the situation well under control and expect to clean up our city within less than a fortnight."

The first funeral of flood victims will be held tomorrow. Although a few more of the dead were identified today no more bodies were recovered.

"We have only just begun to find the dead," said Coroner Hanley.

The requirements for citizens' papers are a five years' residence in the United States and a one year's residence in Pennsylvania as well as a knowledge of the principles of government here.

1,800 GO ON THE MERCHANTS' PICNIC TO OLYMPIA PARK

Baltimore & Ohio Runs Four Special Trains for Patrons.

PLENTY OF ROOM FOR EVERYONE

Committees Are Kept Busy, But Handle Affairs Well and Nobody Is Left Behind Who Wanted to Go, Auto Run Attracts Dozen Machines.

About 1,800 persons left Connellsville this morning on four special trains to attend the Merchants & Manufacturers outing at Olympia Park, near McKeesport. There was no way of determining just how many persons took in the outing but it is believed 1,800 will be close to it. There were four special trains instead of three, but at very few knew that there was to be a fourth when it pulled out at . . . The fourth had few people on board. There were coaches enough for 00 more than attended.

With fine weather the outing promises to be a great success and it was a happy crowd that rode away to have a day of fun and jollity at the West Penn's big pleasure resort. The details of the outing were well handled and there was no confusion attendant upon the dispatching of the special trains. In anticipation of possible confusion and trouble in handling such a crowd Patrolmen M. H. Wilhelm and George Leiner of the Baltimore & Ohio special police patrolled the platform in uniform. This was considerable of a novelty for it is only on big days that the railroad police are required to appear in uniform.

The first special train of nine coaches and a baggage car left the station at 7:15 o'clock, about 15 minutes late. It was well filled and had probably 600 on board.

The second special steamed out at 8:10 o'clock with 10 cars and a baggage car. It was not so well filled as the first one, there being many vacant seats in the coaches and one coach without anyone in it. A generous estimate of the number on board would be 400.

The third special came through from Dunbar and had about 160 Dunbar residents on board. It left at 8:30 o'clock with nine coaches and a baggage car and at most 600 persons.

Just before the third special left the Connellsville Military Band arrived at the station and played two lively numbers to add to the gaiety of the occasion. Then it was announced that a fourth special would leave at 8:35 o'clock. This was news even to the committee but it was done by the railroad officials, the idea being to divide the 10 coaches into four instead of three sections. Members of the various committees and a small number of stragglers rode away on the last train.

COMPANY D WILL LEAVE TOMORROW FOR ANNUAL CAMP

Guardsmen to Spend Week With the Second Brigade at Indiana, 61 on Roster.

With a complement of 61 men Captain Joseph C. Herwick of Company D, Tenth Regiment, will leave tomorrow morning at 7 o'clock for Indiana to attend the annual encampment of the Second Brigade, N. G. P. Only three men will not accompany the company. Private William G. Bradley being on sick leave and Privates French Dyers, who is located at Ann Arbor, Michigan, and Harry McCartney of town being on furloughs.

Camp Colonel Frank R. Rutledge will open Saturday at noon and will be broken next Saturday morning, the local military being expected to arrive home late that afternoon.

A deviation from usual camp life is promised this year in the location of the camp site. The brigade encampment will this year be camped in a large orchard near the Indiana race track. This will be a welcome relief for the soldiers who are usually required to pitch their tents out in the glaring sunshine.

The company will have a new kitchen and dining room outfit this year together with the new regulation tents. Heretofore the tents have been smaller, four men sharing a tent. This year the tents are larger, furnishing accommodations for eight men.

Several promotions were announced by Captain Herwick at the regular weekly drill last Tuesday night. Joseph Abkemeier and Joseph Girard, both of whom have several enlistments, were made corporals. Their advancement this time promoted immediately from the ranks to be sergeants. Private Connell, an old regular army man, was promoted to a corporalship.

Major E. S. McKee of the Tenth hospital corps will have his full quota of men on the field.

The Pennsylvania railroad is running an excursion to Indiana on Sunday during the encampment. The round trip being placed at $1.50.

Brigadier General A. J. Logan of the Second Brigade has received notification from Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart that W. S. Luckey, aviator of the Aero Club of America, will give exhibitions of air cruising, bomb dropping and signal work. He will take part in the war maneuvers scheduled.

The camp at Indiana will be the Tenth, Fourteenth, Sixteenth and Eighteenth regiments and Company A of the signal corps. In charge of Company D will be Captain J. C. Herwick and Lieutenants J. S. Vernon and John R. Gibson. S. Franklin Cox is first sergeant. Good kitchen service is again assured the local boys, inasmuch as Cooks Charles Brown and Harry Jacobs will have charge of the culinary end.

Camp Colonel Frank R. Rutledge will be a dry camp according to orders received some time ago from brigade headquarters. Indiana is a dry town and is located in a dry county.

BARGAIN DAYS BIG SUCCESS; SALES GO ABOVE LAST YEAR

Merchants Estimate Total Volume of Business at $90,000.

RAIN FAILS TO CHECK BUYING

In Spite of Unfavorable Weather Conditions, New Record Is Established and Buying Is Greater Than During Any of the Previous Years.

Connellsville's Bargain Days were the most successful that have ever been held here in spite of the fact that showers threatened to put a crimp in shopping on both days. As a matter of fact it did rain the greater part of the afternoon on the first day of the big sales but if this had any effect on the buying the figures fail to show it.

A committee of business men met last night after the stores had closed, and from the reports made and estimates of those yet to be submitted, it was stated that the total volume of business done by all the merchants on the two days would be in the neighborhood of $90,000. This estimate is said to be conservative. Some stores reported sales 100 per cent and more in excess of last year.

"We could have stopped selling at noon yesterday and been ahead of last year's business," a prominent merchant declared today. "Of course the rain interfered with shopping to some extent, but the figures really do not show it. I am afraid that if the weather conditions had been better that we would have sold out our entire stock. As it was we emptied a few shelves before we got through."

The merchants are enthusiastic over the results of their fifth annual Bargain Days. Not one reported his sales as being below those of last year. Most of them declared that the increase ranged from 10 to 25 per cent in excess of any previous Bargain Days.

It is probable that a movement will be started to hold Bargain Days twice a year instead of once. Several merchants advocate this method of turning over their stock in preference to having a number of scattered sales during the year.

"The Bargain Day idea is a splendid one for merchandising as well as for those who buy," a merchant said. "It not only enables the merchant to dispose of surplus stock at the end of the season, but the general advertising campaign that is carried on enables shoppers to take advantage of opportunities that otherwise might be overlooked."

One of the effects of each succeeding Bargain Day is the winning over of the small merchant who for a time were inclined to believe that only the department stores profited. The experience of five years has demonstrated that Bargain Day has been a good investment for both the large and small dealer.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Aug. 5.—The county court today ordered County [illegible] to proceed with Attorney General A. A. The road has about 25 miles of main track in this county which was completed in 1912 but has never been operated.

It is said that complaint will be based on the allegation that the road secured rights of way by condemnation which gives the public service commission the right to demand operation of regular freight and passenger trains.

Former Governor W. E. Glasscock and John Purinton, secretary of the Morgantown Business Men's Association were before the court urging the action. Wholesale concerns and retail merchants declare they are suffering financial losses because the road is idle.

SMITH DAWSON, VETERAN OF CIVIL WAR, SUCCUMBS

Pneumonia Fatal to Well Known Resident of the West Side, Was 87 Years Old

Pneumonia resulted in the death of Smith Dawson, 87 years old, veteran of the Civil War and the oldest resident of the West Side, this morning at 7:15 o'clock at the family residence, 136 North First street. Mr. Dawson drove his team up until a week ago, when he contracted pleurisy from a severe cold. Later pneumonia developed and caused his death. He was conscious up until last night. Until his illness Mr. Dawson had been in good health. Funeral Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the house with Rev. K. L. Barrows, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, officiating. The William F. Kurtz Post No. 104, Grand Army of the Republic will be in charge. Interment in Chestnut Hill cemetery.

Mr. Dawson was born in Connellsville on July 17, 1828, a son of Robert and Elizabeth Delaney Dawson. With the exception of a few years which he spent at Flood Ford virtually all his life was spent in the West Side, being one of the town's most substantial citizens. He was a teamster for many years and in his early days drove his team from Connellsville to various parts of Fayette and Westmoreland counties and as far east as Cumberland. Previous to the Civil War he carried mail from Connellsville to Brownsville. Mr. Dawson was remarkably active for a man of his advanced years and was one of the most familiar characters in the West Side where he was known and respected by practically every man, woman and child. He was street commissioner and constable in the old borough of New Haven, and always took a keen interest in any movement made for the welfare of the town.

At the outbreak of the Civil War Mr. Dawson enlisted with the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, Company K, and was one of the few surviving members in Connellsville. He seldom failed attending the annual reunions of the cavalry. Last year accompanied by Col. J. J. Barnhart, his brother-in-law, he attended the reunion at Watsontown, and had planned to attend this year with Colonel Barnhart. Mr. Dawson fought valiantly for his country and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. He was one of the most active members of the William F. Kurtz Post No. 104 Grand Army of the Republic, having at various times held different offices in the Post. He always kept in close touch with his fellow comrades and was known for his interest taken in the sick comrades, always being ready to lend his assistance in every way possible. He also took an active part in social gatherings of the Post. He was a member of the Fayette County Veterans Association.

Mr. Dawson was married to Miss Melinda Barnhart, daughter of Nicholas and Susan Barnhart, September 7, 1848. Her death occurred a number of years ago. The following children survive: Miss Elizabeth Dawson, at home; Mrs. Susan Ramsey of Hazelwood; Mrs. Lou Lewis of New Kensington and Mrs. G. P. Kane of Arnold, Pa. Two sisters, Mrs. Matilda [illegible] of Perryopolis, [illegible] years old, Mrs. Elizabeth Oates of Connellsville, 80 years old, and a brother, George Dawson of McKeesport, 90 years old, survive.

salient in the Russian line formed by the bend [illegible] Warsaw and a large portion of Poland had been a thorn in the flesh of the Russian military authorities. They showed this by their desperate and at times partially successful attempts to straighten their fighting front. Before they could advance at the center and move west from Warsaw the wings must be brought up so as to prevent successful flanking movements.

The city which the Teuton forces have been besieging lies on the Vistula, [illegible] miles southwest of Petrograd and 320 miles east of Berlin. It is an important industrial center and its population is estimated at not far from 800,000. Wars for the possession of Poland raged around it in the Middle Ages and in the early part of the 17th century it supplanted Cracow, the ancient capital as the seat of Polish government. Prussia held it from 1795 to 1806 and for seven years after that it was in the possession of one of Napoleon's vassals. The Russians entered it in 1813 when it became the capital of the new kingdom of Poland.

In 1830 the population rose against the Russians and in September of the following year the forces of the Russian Emperor recaptured the city.

SHARPSBURG TO ENTERTAIN THE FIRE FIGHTERS

Great Preparations are Being Made for Coming Convention.

EXPECTING A RECORD CROWD

One Hundred Fifty Companies Have Reported Their Intention of Attending; Connellsville is to be Represented by a Large Delegation.

SHARPSBURG, Aug. 5.—With all details complete for the welcoming of the delegates and visitors attending the twenty-second annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Firemen's Association during the week of August 9-14, Sharpsburg is now preparing to make the event the greatest in the history of the old town.

To greet the visitors the borough has made preparations on a scale that would do credit to some of the larger cities of the state. Decorative schemes outlined by the businessmen's committee and the municipal officials are elaborate and call for the outlay of much money. Main street, the principal thoroughfare, will [illegible] of bunting, streamers and colored pennants, as will North and [illegible] Canal streets and Middle street. Interspersed in this riot of color will be an electrical display calling for double that ever paid by any other city for the same purpose. In all 17,000 feet of wiring and 6,000 75-watt lamps will diffuse varicolored lights throughout the borough. Highways, Etna and Aspinwall, adjoining Sharpsburg, will also be gaily decorated.

Sharpsburg has a feature that no other convention town has ever had; this is Coney Island. The council has arranged for the transformation of Coney Island bathing beach into a veritable fairyland for the entertainment of the fire laddies and their families. Coney Island is located under the Highland bridge opposite Nineteenth street on a plot in the Allegheny river known to rivermen as Six-Mile-Island.

Realizing that the cool breezes and bathing facilities offered by the beach will be greatly appreciated by the visitors, lights have been strung on the beach so that the crowd may enjoy the bathing after the day's festivities are over. In addition guards will be placed at convenient intervals to prevent accidents. Dressing tents have been erected for the convenience of bathers and a number of fast motor boat ferries will give ample transportation from the mainland.

All conveniences for the fifteen companies who have selected their camp sites for the week have been arranged. The camp sites will make a little village of their own running from Sixteenth to Twenty-third streets between Main and the river. Electric lights, gas and water connections have been made. No better location could have been selected; clean, well-drained and enjoying the cool breezes from the river, the visiting tenting colony will have an ideal spot called "Home" while they remain in hospitable Sharpsburg.

Thursday, August 26, about 150 companies with bands and 1,800 uniformed firemen will parade. They will form in Sharpsburg on 13 streets north of the railroad tracks, which gives about 12,000 feet for this purpose. From Sharpsburg they will march to Etna and West Etna. They will then pass through Sharpsburg to Aspinwall and return to Tenth street where they will break ranks. The route of parade will be about seven miles, while the parade itself will be about four miles in length. There will be no countermarching. The reviewing stand has been erected opposite the borough offices on North Canal street, where the judges will award the prizes which will total $[illegible].

The firemen's ball will be held on Wednesday night, August 11, in St. Joseph's Hall, Ninth and Clay streets. The queen of the convention will lead the grand march. A member from each company in the association will have charge of the affair.

That smooth hard track on Main and Middle street has been entirely repaved with asphalt for a distance of a mile. On this new straightaway the competitive tests of the firemen will be held, as well as the athletic events and other sports of the week. Prizes for the races amount to $[illegible]. These races will be held Thursday, August 12. Four water battles will be held and the prize money amounts to $[illegible]. These will be held Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

At the convention in Connellsville last year, 112 companies were represented by 175 members. For this convention 150 companies, representing 700 members have signified their intention to attend. The attendance on Thursday, August 12 (parade day), is estimated at 75,000.

One of the largest carnival companies in the country will be one of the attractions for the week. This company uses 42 cars in transporting its outfit and members. In addition to this big attraction there will be 21 smaller shows. Over this whole amusement location will be a wondrous display of varicolored lights festooned with electrically lighted and arranged streamers, pennants and flags of all nations. Each of the shows will be clean and wholesome from beginning to end.

FAULT OF THE SYSTEM.

The Connellsville News has been an ardent supporter of Commission Government and President Higbee an earnest defender and promoter of the same. As a citizen of legal attainments and patriotic endeavor, the latter did much to promote the legislation which gave to Pennsylvania and to Connellsville this form of government for third class cities. Connellsville has been under its beneficent operation for upwards of two years past. The personnel of its City Council has hitherto had the unqualified approval of The News and its corporate head. It is rather surprising, therefore, to note the sudden change of heart which prompts such utterances as these:

"The street department has long been regarded as the weakest in the city administration. It has almost constantly been under fire since the new government became effective. If the gentlemen who are at the head of it feel incompetent to properly conduct it, out of justice to the city and their own reputations they should gracefully retire. A large sum of money was recently made available for street improvement purposes. It would be criminal to waste it on inefficient work."

Without attempting to enter upon the merits of this controversy, which seems to embody the grade of Pittsburg street in the immediate vicinity of President Higbee's home, The Courier desires to point out that one of the greatest defects of the present form of government is that it places too much power and responsibility in the hands of single members. Third class city government under the Clark Act is an oligarchy of independent constituents. It is like a five-horse team with every horse hitched singly and nobody handling the reins, the result being that the horses sometimes pull together and other times they don't.

Under the old system the Council selected competent persons to take charge of its street and other work, under the direction and subject to the control of the Council as a body. Under the new and improved system, five men sit in separate judgment upon the business of the city. One man has entire charge and almost absolute sovereignty over street and sewer work. He directs the expenditures and approves the bills. He is the Czar of the Pay Roll. The heads of other departments do the same. The public expenditures are no longer public. They are no longer faithfully laid before the people in the columns of the newspapers simply because they are no longer presented in open Council meeting. Connellsville has honest city officials who are trying to serve the people faithfully, but we wonder what might happen to Connellsville's finance in the hands of a choice bunch of skilled grafters such as occasionally break into public office when public spirit ebbs.

This is a progressive age and heaven forbid that Connellsville should stand still in her government any more than her growth, but it might be well to be certain what is good government and what is not before we give it the stamp of our hearty approval. When the Clark act was under consideration we pointed out a number of its defects and these are beginning to prove themselves by experience. Experience is a thorough school, but it is sometimes a tedious and often expensive, and it promises to be both in the matter of third class city government.

It is to be hoped that this legislation will be subject to revision in the next legislature in the light of reason and common sense.

BARGAIN DAYS.

The prosperity of Connellsville's Fifth Annual Bargain Sale is shown in the fact that it has been an entire success in spite of the inclement weather which prevailed during both days. The gross sales approximated $10,000, exceeding those of the previous year by 20%. Bargain Day Sales have become established institutions in Connellsville, and what is more important commercially their reputation has spread over a large tributary territory. Hence we find that the volume of business is steadily increasing.

We commend these figures to the careful consideration of some of our Uniontown contemporaries, notably The Record and The Standard which estimated the Uniontown Bargain Sales at $70,000 and opined that the one-horse village of Connellsville would never get within wireless communication with that amount of business. It seems that Connellsville has done about 33% better than Uniontown, though the latter advertised profusely in four newspapers while Connellsville was content with two, one of which furnished the bulk of the circulation.

The Uniontown brethren may indulge in their usual quip concerning Mud Island and the ... interest but the fact remains that in spite of Uniontown's vain pretense, Connellsville continues to be the center of ... traffic and merchandising, and it will so remain until the roof of the court house falls in.

The unsatisfactory experience of the School Board in trying to fill one vacancy in the high teachers suggests the horrible suspicion that the directors might take all summer if Superintendent Ashe threw back on their hands the selection of the balance of the teachers.

The only Connellsville Bargain Day offer which was neglected was Notary Kurtz's offer to furnish free marriage fees to any who desired to embark upon the matrimonial voyage. This is all the more singular since the proposition included an offer to obtain a divorce if the trial trip was unsatisfactory. Perhaps the very attractiveness of this bargain caused visitors to be shy of it. They thought it was too good to be true, especially the promise of a free divorce.

Alexandre Dumas

By GEORGE FITCH, Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

Alexandre Dumas was the Rubens of literature. He lived sixty-seven years and in that time produced more plays and books than a strong man could have written in the same time, using both hands.

Dumas was the grandson of a West India mulatto woman—a fact which has caused earnest critics of the negro race to scratch their heads doubtfully many times. His grandfather was a French nobleman and from him Dumas inherited enough polish to break into the big league socially and become secretary to a Duke at $240 a year and board.

He was about twenty at this time. In 1829 at the age of twenty-six he produced his first play. It netted him $4,000 and almost as much fame as he could acquire nowadays by making funny motions with his feet before a moving picture camera.

Dumas immediately wrote a dozen more plays and became rich and powerful. He built his own theatre and also a country house on which he spent half a million francs. He wrote "The Count of Monte Cristo" and all France sat up waiting for the next installment. He was the most successful of all writers and frequently had ten stories and half a dozen love affairs going at once.

Year after year Dumas continued to turn out stories in incredible numbers. No magazine would sell without a Dumas story in it and he accommodated them all. Finally a statistician of a nasty investigative disposition made some calculations and discovered that Dumas couldn't be writing all of his stories, even if he sat up all night and wrote with his feet. This caused a great sensation and Dumas was accused of running a story factory and hiring journeyman writers at a few dollars per thousand words to fill in his plots—which show that, however great are the strides which business enterprise has made, the old-timers still have a few tricks to show us.

Dumas died in 1870. He is credited with having produced 1200 works of one sort or another. Thus fame is its own misfortune. Even if Dumas didn't write all of his own works he had to read them.

The children along the Leisenring road have a habit of running in front of passing automobiles. To avoid running a child down, a Connellsville party were recently wrecked and seriously injured. The problem is becoming serious. It is infinitely worse than the B. & O. obstruction to the Leisenring road. The Short Line bridge is at least immovable. The autoists know where to find it. It looks as if the automobile drivers who would consult their own safety and the safety of the Leisenring children will have to slow down and run carefully through this crowded avenue of suburban population.

THE SWEATER GIRL AND THE FLUFFY SUMMER GIRL BID MISS AUTUMN WELCOME

THE sweater girl is as much a summer factor as the fluffy girl, and they will both give way very shortly to the smartly tailored autumn girl, whose lines are cast in stricter places than were the flaring skirted summer girl's, for there is no doubt that the princess frock will be the frock that the French couturiers will sanction for the fall and winter. Everything points that way. The redingote, for instance, would not be shown so frequently by the same couturiers were it not to cover a one piece frock, as the tailored dress, whether the idea be princess or not, is to be most in demand. Even for the patrons who visit watering places the couturiers are making one piece frocks of taffeta, serge and gabardine. And, while the majority of these frocks have the full skirt, the flare is confined to the side, and the front and back are plain, fitted flat against the figure, so that the logical idea is the panel down the front and the back, giving the princess idea and still getting away from the old one of many fitted seams. The fullness even in blouses is shown at the sides, the front and back pulled down to the figure.

The redingote in the center of the picture well illustrates this contention. It is an autumn model and, as can be seen, has fullness at the sides and is flat front and back. This model is built of heavy blue gabardine, the invisible collar being made of heavy faille silk. The redingote is buttoned straight down the front, the applied belt also being fastened in the same manner.

But, though the faint rustlings of the autumn fashions are heard, the fluffy, frilly, fancy creations for summer are still with us, and, if the white skirts might seem ungraceful to our eyes in heavy materials, surely we cannot complain about them in the soft, thin fabrics of summer.

Instance the handsome gown dotted with coin spots of embroidery which is shown in this illustration. The material is white organdie, the dots being of nattier blue, and narrow val lace is effectively used as a trimming. The bodice is simple, with yoke and tops of sleeves of plain organdie. The collar is much like a fichu, the ends crossing at the front.

Pictured with this, at the right, is a frilly frock of net, figured with pink roses. The skirt is made with two ruffles, finished at the edge with tiny knife plaitings of plain net. A peplum at the back is finished in the same manner, and white buttons with pink rims trim this, as well as the blouse fronts.

The blouse has a vest and collar of embroidered organdie. The hat is made of the figured net, with an edging of the knife plaited plain net. The parasol is of alternating stripes of pink and white silk.

But the sweaters of the summer girl are the pride of her heart, for never, I venture to say, in the history of the sweater has it been made in such wonderful colors or in such rich materials. The three sweaters shown illustrate my point. The sweater upon the extreme left is of pink and white striped silk trimmed with borders of plain white and buttoned with striped knitted buttons. The collar and sash are of the same material, the sash finished with pink silk tassels.

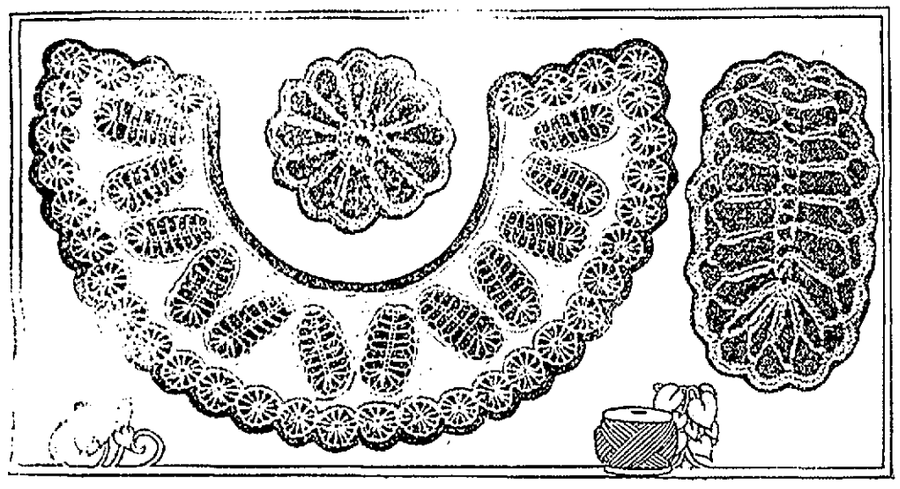

Next is shown a green and white striped sweater, severely plain, and in this case knitted of fleecy Shetland wool. The hat worn with it is of white felt, with a band of green and white encircling the crown. At the right of the picture is shown a very charming sweater. The color scheme is purple and white carried out also in the sports hat worn with it.

Abbreviations: ch., chain; d.c., double crochet; tr., treble.

MATERIALS: Crochet No. 30 and a No. 4 steel hook, a piece of plain muslin or fine linen are required for the collar. The medallions on the collar illustrated are buttonholed on to the muslin, in which case a reel of white buttonhole silk, fairly coarse, will be required. One picture shows the oval medallion finished with a round of double crochet, and in this case they are just sewed on the muslin in the ordinary way and a tiny hole put on the wrong side after the muslin is cut away. The round medallions in the illustration are placed round the edge forming the shape of the collar, and half of them buttonholed. The muslin is then cut away and the lower half of the medallion edge filled in with double crochet. The other cut shows the alternative of filling in the last round with double crochet and sewing the medallion on in the ordinary way.

After the medallions are sewed in position as already described run a double thread all round the neck and buttonhole over it for the edge of collar.

HAT TRIMMINGS ARE ODD.

THEY are so odd, indeed, that you see only one hat trimmed in the same way, at once a relief to the monotony and a strain on one's hat choosing powers. If you are out for decided novelty, how about a soft black milan with dull blue velvet streamers caught to the crown with sure enough seashells—pretty, polished and variegated shells, exactly like the souvenirs you once hided from the seashore? If you are very brave there is a Spanish matador's hat in pink georgette crape and pink hemp with pink ball fringe hanging from brim edge and crown top. Porcelain flowers in odd colors and highly polished, much like a spray plucked from a mid-Victorian mantelpiece vase, trim a midnight blue toque of rough straw, while the necklace of a Cherokee princess dangles alluringly from the side of a green taffeta sports hat.

THE CRETONNE RAGE.

YES, they are using it by reams and square miles for every piece of feminine apparel under the sun. It started with a garden apron; a few suspenders were added, and it was called a "garden frock." Then some one thought that her especial pattern of cretonne would make a cheerful separate skirt for morning wear with thin blouses, and, lo, a thousand other people thought so too! And now there is a cretonne coat suit in one shop and cretonne lined coats in another, while we have had whole bevies of cretonne beach costumes for the bathing season. Perhaps the prettiest use of this cheerful fabric is for children's morning dresses, and when combined with plain colored linen for pockets, collar, cuffs and sash and topped with a quaint cretonne sunbonnet the effect is almost too good to be true.

TIMELY RECIPES

Berry Gems.

TWO tablespoonfuls of butter, one-third cupful of sugar, one egg, one cupful of milk, two and a half cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one cupful of berries.

Reserve one-third cupful of flour to mix with berries, which should be added last. Cream the butter and sugar together, add the egg, well beaten, milk and flour, berries last. Bake in buttered gem pans for twenty-five minutes. These are used as a dessert, with powdered sugar dusted on top of each.

Another dessert which calls for small fruits is

Fruit Bread.

Stew some raspberries, huckleberries or blackberries and sweeten them to taste. Butter small slices of bread, without crusts, and place a layer of them in the bottom of a baking dish. The next layer is of stewed fruit, and so on, alternating until dish is full. Bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes. Serve cold with cream.

Hard Sauce.

Cream well together one cupful of white sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Add three drops of vanilla or a little sherry wine. The beaten white of an egg is often added to make it very foamy. Serve ice cold.

Huckleberry and Blackberry Roll.

To one quart of flour use one tablespoonful of butter, mix this together with a silver knife, add three tablespoonfuls of baking powder and enough milk to make a dough that will roll. Flour one quart of berries, sugar them to taste, put them in a layer on top of dough. Roll from one end. Steam for one hour. This should be served with hard sauce.

Raspberry and Blackberry Tapioca.

Soak one cupful of tapioca overnight. Add one pint of boiling water, simmer until tapioca is clear. To this put fruit and about two cupfuls of sugar. Turn into dish to cool, serving it from the same, ice cold, with sugar and cream.

Blackberry Mush.

Stew one quart of blackberries with one pint of water and three tablespoonfuls of sugar for twenty minutes. When thoroughly done strain through a sieve or cheesecloth, add more sugar if desired, and when this has boiled add four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, dissolved in cold water. A few drops of vanilla improve the flavor. This is one of the most wholesome and economical summer dishes if eaten with rich cream. It is especially fine for children.

Stewed Gooseberries.

Stem and remove the blossom end of the berry. Wash well, cook in porcelain, to one quart of berries adding one pint of water. Stew for about ten minutes. To this add one pound of sugar, stand kettle where it will barely simmer for fifteen minutes, then remove from stove.

Gooseberries are delicious in pies and tarts. The latter are attractive if the dough is cut in fancy strips and laid over the top of the tart.

NEW FOOTWEAR VERY PRETTY

NOT within the memory of the oldest inhabitant has woman's footwear been so varied and interesting, and not within the same time has it been so freakish and so lamentably abused.

Perhaps in a reaction from somber black, practical russet and simple white women have gone quite foolish over the new shoes and boots. None so poor or so modest that she will not achieve high laced boots of gray or putty color or blue or white, pumps of white kid and black patent leather, spats of white or chamois or pearl gray. And the reality is far more exciting than the mere statement sounds, for these effects in pearl and gray and blue and white, etc., are built up on new lines, are elaborated in devious and amazing ways.

Some of the new shoes and boots and slippers are bewitchingly pretty. Many are merely bizarre. Most of them—and here comes the crux of the situation—are ill fitted to purposes of economy and utility.

Smart Late Summer Creation

HAND EMBROIDERED GEORGETTE CRAPE BLOUSE.

GRAY silk georgette crape was used in the building of this pretty blouse, to be worn with a gray tailleur. A border of hand embroidery done in colors of pale pink and deep rose gives the exquisite touch which hand work always gives. The surplice vest is of dainty white batiste buttoned with coral buttons.

The BALL of FIRE

By GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER and LILLIAN CHESTER

COPYRIGHT 1914 BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED by C. D. RHODES

The library was quite steadily devoted to Vedder court tonight. A highly important change had come into the fortunes of Market Square church. It was as if a stone had been thrown into a group of cardboard houses. All the years of planning had gone the way of the wind, and the card houses had all to be built over again. The cathedral had receded by a good five years, unless the force and fire of Rev. Smith Boyd should be sufficient to coax capital out of the pockets of his millionaire congregation; and, in fact, that quite normal plan was already under advisement.

The five of this impromptu council were deep in the matter of ways and means, when a slender apparition, in clinging gray, came down the stairs.

It was Gail, who, for some reason unknown, even to her, had decided that she was selfish; and Rev. Smith Boyd's heart ached as he saw the pallor on her delicately tinted cheeks and the dark trauing about her brown eyes. She slipped quietly in among them, her brown hair loosely waved, so that unexpected threads of gold shone in it when she passed under the chandelier, and she greeted the callers pleasantly, and sat down in the corner, very silent. She was glad that she had come. It was restful in this little circle of friends.

A noise filled the hall, and even the lights of the library seemed to brighten, as Lucile and Ted, Arly and Gerald, and Dick Rodley, came tumbling in, laughing and chattering, and carrying hilarity in front of them like a wave. Gail shoved her tangle of thoughts still farther back in her head, and the sparkle returned into her eyes.

"We're bringing you a personal invitation to Arly and Gerald's yacht party," jabbered Lucile, kissing everybody in reach except Rev. Smith Boyd.

"You might let Arly extend the invitation herself," objected Ted.

"I've given the pleasure to Gerald," laughed Arly, with a vivacious glance at that smiling gentleman. "He does it so much better. Now listen."

"It's a little informal week-end party, on the Whitecap," Gerald informed them, with a new something in him which quite satisfactorily took the place of cordiality. "Sort of a farewell affair. Arly and I are about to take a selfish two months' cruise, all by ourselves," and he glanced fondly at the handsome black-haired young woman under discussion. "We should be pleased to have you join us," and he included Mrs. Boyd and the young rector with a nod.

"Of course we'll come," agreed Gail. "Doctor Boyd, can't you arrange for a week-end party once in your life?"

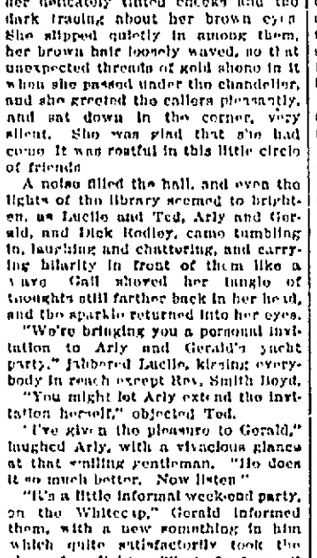

"Unfortunately custom has decreed that week-end parties shall cover Sundays," he regretted, but there was a calculating look in his eye which sent Lucile over to him.

"Play hooky just once," she begged. "This is only a family crowd, the Babbitts and Marion Kenneth, and we who are here."

Rev. Smith Boyd looked at his mother, and that lady brightened visibly.

"When is it to be?" he asked.

"Saturday," Arly informed him, joining Lucile, who had sat on the arm of Mrs. Boyd's chair. Arly sat on the other arm and Gerald Fosland, with an entirely new appreciation of beauty, thought he had never seen a prettier picture than the sweet-faced old lady with the fresh and charming young woman on either side of her.

The Hand With Which She Warded Him Off Was Effective Now.

Rev. Smith Boyd glanced, for just an instant, at Gail, who was now sitting on the leather couch leaning confidingly against her Aunt Grace. He had been at pains to avoid this young lady recently, for it is natural to spare one's self distress; but there were a book of compliments about her which went his heart out to her in quick sympathy.

"I think I'll play hooky," he announced, with a twinkle in the eyes which now cast upon his mother.

"That's being a good sport," approved Ted. "Stay away a Sunday or two, and Market Square church will appreciate you better."

"Let's have some music," demanded Lucile.

"Gail and Doctor Boyd must sing for you," announced Aunt Grace, in whom there was a trace of wistfulness. "They do sing so beautifully together!"

"I'm afraid I can't tonight," refused Gail hastily, and indeed she had good reason why her voice should not have its firm and true quality just now. "I will accompany Doctor Boyd, though, with pleasure," and she started toward the music room.

Rev. Smith Boyd was cut off from the ordinary. His about not being in good voice, and suffering from a slight cold, and such things. He hesitated a moment, and then he followed.

The Bedouin Love Song, the Garden of Sleep, and others of the solo repertoire which Gail had selected for him, came pulsing out of the music room, first hesitantly, and then with more strength, as the friendly nearness between himself and the accompanist became better established.

Presently, the listeners in the library noticed an unusual pause between the songs, a low-voiced discussion, and then, the two perfectly blended voices rose in a harmony so perfect that there was moisture in the eyes of two of the ladies present.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Gail First!

Allison, springing forward with a jerk as he left Jim Sargent's house, headed his long, low runabout up the avenue. He raced into the park, and glanced up at the lookout house as he sped on past; but it was only a fleeting look. He needed no reminder of Gail. As he passed Roseleaf inn, he slowed down. The roadhouse may have given him, and probably did, another reminder of Gail, in such a manner as to concrete him into logical thought; for he slowed down the terrific speed which had been the accompaniment of his unreasoning emotion. The driving required too much concentration for specific thought.

With this turning of his mental attitude, even the slow running of the car seemed to disturb him, and, about half a mile past Roseleaf inn, he came slowly to a stop, sitting at the wheel, with his head bent slightly forward, and staring at the spot where the roadway had ceased to roll beneath his machine. Presently he became aware of the cold, and running his car to the side of the road, he stepped out, and, buttoning his coat around him, crossed a fence and walked through the narrow strip of trees to the river bank, where he stood for a moment looking out upon the misty Hudson, sparkling under the moonlight. He began to walk up and down the bank presently, the turf sinking spongily under his feet, and it was noticeable that his pace grew more and more rapid, until he was striding at a furious rate of speed.

The man was in a torment of passion. He had spent a lifetime in the deliberate acquisition of everything upon which he had set his will; and it was one of the things upon which he had built his success, that, once he had fixed his desire deliberately upon anything, he had held unwaveringly to that object, employing all the forces of which strong men are capable; patient waiting, dogged persistence, or vicious grappling, whichever was best adapted to gain his ends.

Gail! If there had been tender thoughts of her, they were gone now. It was so that he had centered his mind upon her, and himself and his will, until, in all creation, there was nothing else but that was trivial; ambition, power, wealth, fame, the command of empires and of men, were nothing, except as they might lead to her!

So it was that he had come this far, and the roadway to his present height was marked by the cripples he had left behind him, without compunction, without mercy, without compassion. Bankrupts strewed his way, broken men of purpose higher than his own, useful factors in the progress of human life, builders and creators who had advanced the interest of the commonwealth, but who had been more brilliant in construction than they had been in reaping the rewards of their building. It was for Allison to do this. It had been his specialty; the reaping of rewards. It had been his faculty to permit others to build, to encourage them in it, and then, when the building was done, to wrest it away from the builders. That marked him as the greatest commercial genius of his time; and he had much applause for it.

Women. Yes, there had been women, creatures of a common mold with whom he had amused himself, had taken them in their freshness, and broken them, and thrown them away; this in his earlier years. But in his maturity, he had bent all his strength to a greater passion, the acquirement of all those other things which men had wanted and held most dear, among them acquisition, and power, and success. Perhaps it had been bad for him, this concentration, for now it left him at the height of his maturity, with mistaken fancies, with long pent fires, with disproportionate desires. Bringing to these, he had the tremendously abnormal moral effect of never having been thwarted, in a thing upon which he had set his mind, and of believing, by past accomplishment, that anything upon which he had set his wish must be his, or else every victory he had ever gained would be swept aside and made of no value. He must accomplish, or die!

He was without God, this man; he had nothing within him which conceded, for a moment, a greater power than his own. In all his mental imagery, which was rich enough in material things, there was no conception of a deity, or of a need for one. To what should he pray, and for what, when he had himself to rely upon? Worship was an idealistic diversion, a poetic illusion, the refuge of the weak, who excused their lack of strength by ascribing it to a mysterious something beyond the control of any man. He tolerated the popular notion that there must be a God, as he tolerated codes of social ethics, the conventions which laid down, for instance, what a gentleman might or might not do, externally, and still remain a gentleman. In the meantime, if a man-made law came between him and the accomplishment of his ends, he broke it, without a trace of thought that he might be wrong. Laws were the mutual safeguard of the weak, to protect themselves against the encroachment of the strong; and it was in the equally natural province of the strong to break down those safeguards. In the same way he disregarded moral laws. They, too, were for the upholding of the weak, and the mere fact that they existed was proof enough that they were an acknowledgment of the right of the strong to break them.

There is a mistake here. It lies in the statement that Allison recognized no God. He did. Allison. Not Allison, the man, but the unconquerable will of Allison, a will which was a divinity in itself. He believed in it, centered on it all his faith, poured out to it all the fervidness of his heart, of his mind, of his spirit, of his body. He worshiped it!

So it was that he came to the consideration of the one thing which had, attempted to deny itself to him. Gail!

A flame raged through his veins which fairly shook him with its violence. It was not only the reflex of his determination to have her, but it was the terrific need of her which had grown up in him. Have her? Of course he would have her! If she would not come to him willingly, he would take her! She was not to be considered in it any more than he had considered any other adverse factor in the attainment of anything he had desired. He was possessed of a rage now, which centered itself upon one object, and one alone, Gail! She was his new summit, his new peak, the final one where he had planned to rest; but now his angry thought was to attain it, and spurn it, broken and crumbled, as had been all the other barriers to his will, and press ruthlessly onward into higher skies, he knew not where. It was no time now, to think on that. Gail first!

A Flame Raged Through His Veins Which Fairly Shook Him.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Flutter of a Sheet of Music.

Gail, in a pretty little rose colored morning robe, with soft frills of lace around her white throat and at her white elbows, sat on the floor of the music room amid a chaos of sheet music. She was humming a gay little song suggested by one of the titles through which she had leafed, and was gradually sorting her music for the yacht party; instrumental pieces here, popular things there, another little pile of old-fashioned ditties which the assembled crowd might sing, just here a little stack of her own solos, nearby the rector's favorites, between the two their duets. It was her part in one of the latter she was humming now, missing, as she sang, the strong accompaniment of Rev. Smith Boyd's mellow voice. She was more peaceful this morning than she had been for many days.

The butler come through the hall, and Gail looked up with a suppressed giggle as she saw him pass the door. She always had an absurd idea that his hinges should be oiled.

"Miss Gail is not at home, sir," she heard the butler say, and Gail paused with a sheet of music suspended in her hand, the whole expression of her face changing. She had only given instructions that one person should receive that invariable message.

"I beg your pardon, sir!" was the next observation Gail heard, in a tone of as near startled remonstrance as was possible to the butler's wooden voice.

There was a sound almost as of a scuffle, and then Allison, with his top coat on his arm and his hat in his hand, strode to the doorway of the music room, followed immediately by the butler, who looked as if his hair had been peeled a little bit at the edges. Allison had apparently brushed roughly past him, and had disturbed his equanimity for the balance of his life.

Gail was on her feet almost instantaneously with the apparition in the doorway, and she still held the sheet of music which she had been about to deposit on one of the piles. Allison's eyes had a queer effect of being sunken, and there was a strange nervous tension in him. Gail dismissed the butler with a nod.

"You were informed that I am not at home," she said.

"I meant to see you," he replied with a certain determined insolence in his tone which she could not escape. There was a triumph in it, too, as if his having swept the butler aside were only a part of his imperious intention. "I have some things to say to you to which you must listen."

"You had better say them all, then, because this is your last opportunity," she told him, pale with anger, and with a quaver in her voice which she would have given much to suppress.

He cast a look on her which blazed. He had not slept since he had seen her last. He smiled, and the smile was a snarl, displaying his teeth. Something more than anger crept into Gail's pallor.

"I have come to ask you again to marry me, Gail. The matter is too vital to be let pass without the most serious effort of which I am capable. I cannot do without you. I have a need for you which is greater than anything of which you could conceive. I come to you humbly, Gail, to ask you to marry me."

For just a moment his eyes had softened, and Gail felt a slight trace of pity for him; but in the pity itself there was revulsion.

"I cannot," she told him.

"You must!" he immediately rejoined. "As I would build up an empire to win you, I would destroy one to win you. You spoke last night of what you called the cruelty and trickery of the building up of my big transportation monopoly. If it is that which stands between us, it shall not do so for a moment longer. Marry me, and I will stop it just where it is. Why, I only built this for you, and if you don't like it, I shall have nothing to do with it." In that he lied, and consciously. He knew that the moment he had made sure of her his ambition to conquer would come uppermost again, and that he would pursue his dream of conquest with even more ardor than before, because he had been refreshed.

"That would make no difference, Mr. Allison," she replied. "I told you last night that I would not marry you because I do not and could not love you. There does not need to be any other reason." There was in her an inexplicable tension, a reflex of his own, but, though her face was still pale, she stood very calmly before him.

The savageness which was in him, held too long in leash, sprang into his face, his eyes, his lips, the set of his jaws. He advanced a step towards her. His hands contracted.

"I shall not again ask you to love me," he harshly stated; "but you must marry me. I have made up my mind to that."

"Impossible!" Angry now and contemptuous.

"I'll make you! There is no resource I will not use. I'll bankrupt your family. I'll wipe it off the earth!"

Gail's nails were pressing in her palms. She felt that her lips were cold. Her eyes were widening, as the horror of him began to grow on her. He was glaring at her now, and there was no attempt to conceal the savage cruelty on his face.

"I'll compromise you," he went on. "I'll connect your name with mine in such a way that marriage with me will be your only resource. I'll be an influence you can't escape. There will not be a step you can take in which you will not feel that I am the master of it. Marry you? I'll have you if it takes ten years! I'll have no other end in life. I'll put into that one purpose all the strength and all the will that I have put into the accomplishment of everything which I have done, and the longer you delay me the sooner I'll break you when I do get you."

Out of her very weakness had come strength; out of her overwhelming humiliation had come pride, and though the blood had left her face waxen pale and cold, something within her discovered a will which was as strong in resistance as his was in attack. She knew it, and trembled in the knowledge of it.

"You can't make me marry you," she said, with infinite scorn and contempt.

He clenched his fists and gritted his teeth. Into his eyes there sprang a blaze which she had never before seen, but dimly, in the eyes of any man, but she needed no experience to tell her its despicable meaning. His lips which had been snarling, suddenly took a downward twitch, and were half parted. His nostrils were distended, and his blood, flooding into his face, empurpled it.

"Then I'll have you anyhow!" he hoarsely told her, and, his arms tensed and his head slightly lowered forward, he made as if to advance toward her. He saw in her frightened eyes that she would scream, but he did not know that at that moment she could not. Her heart seemed to have lost its action, and she stood, trembling faint, in the midst of her stress and confusion that the room was turning dark.

The house was very quiet. Mrs. Sargent and Mrs. Davies were upstairs. The servants were all in the rear of the house, or below, or in the upper rooms, at their morning work. He turned swiftly and closed the door of the music room, then he whirled again towards her, with ferocity in his eyes. He came slowly, every movement of him alive with ponderous strength. He was a maniac. He was insane. He was frenzied by one mad thought which had swept out of his universe every other consideration, and the glut to kill was no more fearful than the purpose which possessed him now.

Gail, standing slight, fragile, her brown eyes staring, her brown hair dishevelled about her white brow, felt every atom of strength leaving her, devoured in the overwhelming might of this monstrous creature. The sheet of music, which she had been holding all this time, dropped from her nerveless fingers and fluttered to the floor.

That noise, slight as it was, served to arrest the progress of the man for just an instant. He was in no frame to reason, but some instinct urged him to speed. He crouched slightly, as a wild beast might. But the flutter of that sheet of music had done more for Gail than it had for him. It had loosed the paralysis which had held her, had broken the fascination of horror with which she had been spell-bound. Just behind her was a low French window which led to a small side balcony. With one bound she burst this open, she did not know how, and leaped over the light balcony rail and ran across the lawn to the rectory gate up the steps and into the side door, and into the study, where Rev. Smith Boyd sat toiling over a sermon.

CHAPTER XXV.

Gail Breaks a Promise.

The Whitecap would have been under way except for the delay of the gay little Mrs. Babbitt and her admiring husband, who sent word that they could not arrive until after dinner. So the yacht, long and low and slender and glistening white, lay in the middle of the Hudson river, while her guests, bundled warmly against the crisp breeze, gathered in the forward shelter deck and watched the beginnings of the early sunset.

"I like Doctor Boyd in his yachting cap," commented Lucile as that young man joined them, with a happy mother on his arm.

"It takes away that deadly clerical effect," laughed Arly. "His long coat makes him look like the captain, and he's not so much more handsome."

"I don't mind being the topic of discussion so long as I'm present," commented Rev. Smith Boyd, glancing around the group as if in search of someone.

"It rather restricts the conversation," Mrs. Helen Davies observed, at the same time watching, with a smile, the tableau of her sister Grace and Jim Sargent. Gail and herself had taken Grace out shopping, and had forced on her sedate taste a neat and "fetching" yachting costume, from flowing veiled cap to white shoes, which had dropped about twenty years from her usual appearance, and had brought a renewed enthusiasm to the eyes of her husband.

The cherub cheeked Marion Kenneth glanced wistfully over at the rail where Dick Rodley, vying with the sunset in splendor, stood chatting with gay Ted Teasdale and the stiff Gerald Fosland.

"Where's Gail?" demanded the cherub cheeked one.

"It's time that young lady was up on deck," decided Arly, and rose.

"She's probably taking advantage of the opportunity to dress for dinner," surmised Mrs. Davies. "In fact, I think it's a good idea for all of us," but the sunset was too potent to leave for a few moments, and she sat still.

Where indeed was Gail? In her beautiful little curly maple bed, and digging two small fists into the maple-brown coverlet. The pallor of the morning had not yet left her face, and there were circles around the brown eyes which gave them a wan pathos, there was a crease of pain and worry, too, in the white brow.

Gail had come to the greatest crisis in her life. So far she had told no one of what had occurred that morning. When she had rushed into the rector's study he had sprung up, and seeing the fright in her face and that she was tottering and ready to fall, he had caught her in his strong arms, and she had clung trustfully to him, half faint, until wild sobs had come to her relief. Even in her incoherence, however, even in her wild disorder of emotion, she realized that there was danger, not only to her but to everyone she loved, in the man from whom he had run away, and she could not tell the young rector any more than that she had been frightened. It was strange how instinctively she had headed for Rev. Smith Boyd's study, strange then, but not now. In that moment of flying straight to the protection of his arms, he knew something about herself, and about Rev. Smith Boyd, too. She knew why she had refused those others who had wooed her; Willis Cunningham and Houston Van Ploon and Dick Rodley, poor Dick! and Allison and all the others. She frankly and complacently admitted to herself that she loved Rev. Smith Boyd, but she put that additional worry in the background. It could be fought out later. She would have been very happy about it if she had had time, although she could see no end to that situation but unhappiness.

FREE SUGAR FINE FOR THE TRUST; NO JOY FOR CONSUMER

Democratic Tariff Has Put Beet Sugar Industry Under.

ONLY WAR SAVES THE PLANTERS

Concern Which Has a Monopoly in the Trade Gets Its Raw Material in Free and Pockets the Profits. American Shipping Getting the Ax

Special to The Courier.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 4.—New England's fourth dissolution and more suits for the American Sugar Refining Company, which in the premise of trust dissolution recently elected president of the sugar company. For a quarter of a century the American Sugar Refining Company has been at constant odds with the Federal Government and with various state governments. At different times it has been involved in dissolution suits, conspiracy charges, fraudulent operations and other forms. Frequently it has been detected thus turned to the murder of the American sugar industry as a means of swelling profit.

The opposition of this company was coincident with the elevation of the Democratic party to power, the consequent defeat of the beet sugar producers and the lowering of the duties on sugar which is scheduled for the free list after May 1916. For a long time before the Underwood-Wilson Tariff law was even in process of formation this corporation in conjunction with the Federal Sugar Refining Company, hired a publicity man in the person of Frank C. Lowry to conduct a campaign for free sugar. Labels were struck on barrels of sugar going out from these companies calling on buyers to demand of their congressmen free sugar legislation and promising them a marked reduction in price should such a measure be adopted. When the presidential decree all representatives of business interests in Washington seeking in vain to preserve some remnant of a Protective Tariff were branded as pernicious lobbyists, the agents of these sugar refining companies were among the elect. Their lobbying was of the most flagrant sort but they appeared to be in consonance with Democratic doctrine.

To the American Refining Company free sugar meant two things. The destruction of the beet sugar industry in this country which for three or four months of the year controlled the market and the importation of raw sugar free of duty to be refined by the company. This duty was promised to the consumer in the shape of lower prices but it has been and will be absorbed by the company itself. Mr. Spreckels testifying before the Hardwick committee when asked by Congressman Hinds if he was in favor of free sugar replied "Absolutely." Charles R. Heike secretary of the American Company testified that free trade would destroy the industry absolutely in this country and he would approve of that.

In the face of such testimony as this and the record of the American Sugar Refining Company the Democratic party cuddled the Sugar Trust to its bosom and gave them the paper for which they cried. It was perhaps the most bitterly fought measure in the history of Tariff legislation but the Captain of the Trust had demanded free Sugar and his wishes had to be respected. The effect was immediate. In July 1914 before the outbreak of the European war 43 large plantations in Louisiana went out of business and many were disposed of at forced sale. Some mills were dismantled and the machinery sent to Cuba or Central America. It was estimated that the reduction in acreage in beets and cane was 25 per cent but sugar remained at the same old price. The war has temporarily saved the industry.

GENERAL TRACY IN THE CABINET UNDER HARRISON

When General Benjamin F. Tracy who was secretary of the navy under President Harrison was taken ill at his home 11 East Sixtieth street in New York City it was realized that there wasn't much hope for him. His wonderful vitality was all that was sustaining him was the declaration of Dr. William H. Pritchard who was the general's physician for more than twenty-two years.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield has refused to make public a list of names of persons employed to take the census of manufactures. It would have been much less embarrassing to this administration if it could have kept secret the names of the diplomatic representatives appointed to South and Central American Republics but, unfortunately for the public welfare, those appointments required confirmation by the Senate and publicity could not be avoided.

The deficit last year in the Post Office Department was between six and seven millions. On top of that there come the railroads of New England asking the Government for eleven millions which they claim by reason of underpayment for carrying the mails in the last few years. If all the railroads were similarly underpaid and if they can recover the same due what will be the postal deficit?

The styles in women's shoes are to be less bizarre and more expensive we are told. In other words for more money one will get less shoe. This seems to be a universal tendency with the necessities of life as affected by Democratic legislation.

Our domestic construction of ocean tonnage fell off 45,867 gross tons for the fiscal year 1915 as compared with 1914 though there was a large increase in our tonnage of foreign-built vessels in the fiscal year 1915, according to a recent statement of the Democratic publicity bureau of the Department of Commerce which exhibits a sigh of conscious rectitude in a bulletin on the Growth of American Merchant Marine.

According to the Department's figures there were constructed in the United States during the fiscal year 1914, 1291 vessels of 311,578 gross tons and for the fiscal year 1915, 1226 of 215,711 gross tons. This statement is dismissed as of small importance and is followed by one showing the registration under the Ship Registry Act of August 18, 1914—147 foreign built vessels of 528,807 gross tons, making the total for the year from both sources 1,373 vessels of 744,418 gross tons. This tonnage says the department is the largest annual addition to the American merchant fleet in the history of the United States. In 1908 the total increase was 718,181 gross tons. In 1907 it was 796,785 gross tons and in 1875 it was [illegible] gross tons.

No mention is made of the cause any more than they will acknowledge that our large export trade is due to the European war. Neither is any reference made to the torpedoing of our merchant marine by the so-called seamen's bill passed by a Democratic Congress and which is so restrictive in its nature that the Pacific Mail line, the Robert Dollar vessels and many others have announced their intention of braving the hazards of war and hoisting a foreign flag on November 2nd next when the seamen's bill goes into effect.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels says he wants the new Navy Board to be made up of the ablest men in the country who have demonstrated their leadership in their profession. But that wasn't the way he got his job.

A Tariff law that brings neither protection to the American producer nor revenue to the Government is its own answer to the men and the Administration that framed it.
